Marilyn's new life After a year of murrage, beset by misfortunes, Marilyn Monroe and her husband say they are "getting organized for a long honeymoon."

It has seen over a year since the world's most huoyant platinum blonde married the serious playwright Arthur Miller. Both adout they have "changed." Marilyn, as a completely duting vite, has adopted her husband's enty (New York), his faith his future and his family as her own.

Marilyn says, "When Arthur's parents told me, 'Darling, at last you have a father and a mother,' this was the wonderful moment of my life-next to marrying their son." And Miller professes to be "a new man at $1. . . . This has been the most learning year of my life. I've learned about living from her." Their first year together was studded with trouble. The Millers say they are now only beginning to have the time to enjoy their "real honeymoon" On these pages is the hest exten sive group of pictures of the couple at leisure since their marriage Following a passion for the privacy of her home, Marilyo didn't want to be photographed inside — 'I'll do anything outside'' -an attitude that prompted Miller to call his wife 'the girl from outer space" and "the great American outdoor gill"

Marilyn has nicknames but "comes running to anything"

"We live on the 13th floor in our aparlment house," Marilyn says, "and that's exactly our attitude toward life."

Those closest to Marilyn say that she is not titely to dwell on the bitterness of losing her first bally after a short preguency. She will instead abully also to have society. A few law to the bally after a snort pregnancy. One was instead calculy plan to have onother. As for her husband's legal problems, these may soon he resolved. Miller is appealing his contempt of Congress conviction after receiving a suspended one-month just sen-tence. He says, "I am fighting for my life," and is determined to clear his name if he can.

All summer, except for Marilyn's ten-day hospitalization, the Millers lived in a farmhouse in Amagansett, a village on the tip of Long Island.

They went fishing and swimming, driving along the deserted beathes and the back-country roads in their jeep "We even get along in a car," Marilyn says, "He drives, but doesn't have any sense of tyn 3a/3. He of ives, but doesn't have any sense of direction. I do I remember the way we came from, and that's how we go back. He calls mc 'Hey, Disection Finder!' omong other things. His other names for me are 'Penny Dreadful,' Gramercy 5' and 'Sugar Finney'—all very literary Actually, I come running to anything. I call him 'Art' or 'Poppy'. If I'm mad, I call him 'Arthur'."
"When who call were 'Arthur'."

"When she calls me 'Arthur', I know I haven't been working hard enough," Miller says "She's a demon about my work, and expects me to put in regular hours" For his writing (his new play will

Marilyn enjoyed capering like a frisky beginner again

From the security of her marriage, Marilyn has regained the sense of fun that once made her the most quoted pin-up girl in the world. The pictures on these pages were taken the night before her English-made movie, The Prince and the Show-girl, opened in New York. The following night, she was the guest of honor of the city's notables at a high-society charity benefit. But now she walked in and around Central Park with all the firstiness of a newly discovered actress, followed by imin and around Central Park with all the friskiness of a newly discovered actress, followed by immense throngs of people She even wanted to saunter down Times Square, wearing a sandwith sign reading: "Don't eat at Sam's Diner. Come and see me at Radio City Moste Hall." Then she paused and said "But that might make Sir Laurence Olivier drop his monocle."

Marilyn now says of her life. "If I'd observed.

Marilyn now says of her life, "If I'd observed all the rules, I'd never have got anywhere." She has shown that acting can't spuil Marilyn Monroe, and that her marriage to an intellectual playwright has every chance of being an enduring one, in spite of all predictions of disaster.

What does it feel like to be mairied to Marilyn Monroe? "Well, now kids in the streets and newspaper photographers tall me 'Arthur'," says Miller "It's impossible to have a superficial re-hewspaper photographers call me 'Arthur'," says Miller "It's impossible to have a superficial te-lationship with her. She's too honest and earthy for anything phony. She has an enormous sense of play, inventiveness—and unexpectedness—not only as a wife but as an actress. She could never be dull. I took her as a serious actress cene before I met her. I think sho's an adont comedienne, but I also think she might turn into the greatest traggic actress than can be imagined. But let me add: She can be a bad actress so far as I'm concerned, and I can still love her."

Marilyn says her new husband to the first man

Marilyn says her new husband is the first man Marilyn says her new husband is the first man who hasn't become consperated with her for being late. ("At least I was on time for the weeding") While Marilyn goes through her four hour ritual for getting ready to go out, Miller will wait comfortably, reading and puffing on his pipe. He once told her mildly that if she didn't wear any make up, also would still look good to him. But Marilyn, like most famous besuties, feels insecure about her
